Why use a ghost writer

Your message has an expiration date

Whether your challenge is a function of your native language or limited time, using a ghost writer can ensure that your message is delivered while it is still relevant. How? It's not enough to simply write a manuscript. The manuscript must be suited to the journal to which it is submitted. It must also be robust and able to withstand peer review.

Your message will be stronger

An indirect benefit of working with a ghost writer is the inherent clarifying effect of the process. The skilled ghost writer refines the outline of the manuscript and prompts the author to address inconsistencies or gaps. Additionally, the natural tendency to leave text as it is (you've taken the time to write it—why change it now?) is replaced by an interaction that encourages revision and refinement.

How to use a ghost writer

It's more than word processing

A skilled ghost writer provides more than word processing services. Our approach is to learn the client and subject matter sufficiently to mimic the style and voice of the author. And from the first draft we guarantee that the manuscript is consistent with the requirements of the journal to which it will be submitted.

Consider personality

Good writing, including technical writing, comes from a place of vulnerability. As such, the relationship between author and ghost writer must be one of trust and respect. We build and maintain strong relationships.

Takmos provides expert technical writing

We are published authors and technical experts. We master new subject matter quickly and mimic the author's style and voice so that the message is not lost.
